AS TO DISRAELI'S FORESIGHT

American Writer Asserts His Position as Great Statesman Is Not Fully Assured.

Just 40 years ago an English historian, drawing his parrative of modern Europe to a close with an account of the peace of Berlin, ubserved: "Should the Balkans become a true military frontier for Turkey, should northern Bulgaria sink to the condition of a Hussian dependency, and eastern Roumelia, in severance from its enslaved kin. abandon itself to thriving ease behind the garrisons of the reforming Ottoman, Lord Beaconsfield will have deserved the fame of a statesman whose intuitions, undimmed by the mists of experience, penetrated the secret of the future, and shaped, because they discerned, the destiny of nations." Upon this, viewing the world today, no comment seems necmere accident, that, as his admirers say, his influence and reputation are greater now than ever; it may be that this spirit which conquered obscurity may prevail against oblivion. But if the same fortune follows his other views and policies we must believe that he was but a meteor, not

ALL OF HISTORIC INTEREST

Germantown (Pa.) Citizen Has Pathway of Stepping Stones, Each of Which is Remarkable.

Leading to a historic sundial in his garden in Germantown, Philadelphia, Charles F. Jenkins has two pathways of stepping stones, to each of which a history attaches. On the left, in the "lastorical way," are stolles from the scene of the battle of Germantown, from the Brandywine battlefield, from General Wolfe's rocky pathway to the Plains of Abraham at Quebec, from the homes of William Penn and Anthony Wayne, from Valley Forge and Washington's headquarters at Chadds Ford, from the site of America's first paper mill, built by Rittenhouse, near the Wissahickon, and from other spots round which associations thickly cluster.

On the other side of the dial is the "ancestral way," now numbering 14 stones; but that number will presfore 1700 who left footprints on the sands of time, if not in rock formation.-Philadelphia Public Ledger.
